

Financial Literacy Month with JA:

All the Tools You Need to Succeed

Did you know that 80% of adults wish they had been required to take a financial education course during high school, according to the National Endowment for Financial Education? Now more than ever, long-term success as an adult starts from firm financial footing when first starting out on your own.

As teens across the state grapple with the realities of financial responsibilities, JA is a critical connection for schools, educators, and families to help Wisconsin's young transition into adulthood.

Basic personal finance skills are an important part of preparing for and managing the unexpected. JA programs do more than teach students the math of financial literacy, they provide age-appropriate learning experiences that give students the confidence to make informed decisions that create financial stability, regardless of their future income.

JA offers financial literacy opportunities for students from elementary school through high school. Our reputation as a state leader in financial literacy programs is built on a rigorous, multi-year curriculum that aligns with state educational standards and has been shown by third-party evaluations to have a positive impact on Wisconsin students' financial readiness.
